The defendant. And affidivit having been made and filed that the defendant is not a resident of the State of Virginia, it is ordered that he appear here within filtendays after the due publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit. Teste: CHAS, O. SAVIILIS, Clerk. No Doubt That He Was Greater Than He Seemed.

They believed him a man of no mind or talent, and each party thought they could use him for their own ends. Well. briefly, he was elected, and from that day they were convinced how mistaken they had been in their opinion of the man. He has governed France wisely and well-has strictly observed the Constitution ammist all manner of abuse and provocation from other parties; has maintained order, encouraged manufactures and commerce, made labor for the ouvriers, and, in fine, become so popular that could a vote have been taken last week, he would have been elected by a larger majority than before. As soon, however, as the Bourbons and the Orleanists found he was becoming popular, that he was a man of real ability, and was not content to play second fiddle to any of them, and that he had an ambition of his own, they all unitted against and waged upon lilin a deadly war. They believed him a man of no mind united against and waged upon film a deadly war.

He has been obliged to change his ministry a dozen times; they have annoyed and insulted him in every way, and finally threatened him. By an article in the Constitution inserted especially against him when it was known he would be elected, he was not re-eligible for a second torm until after an interval of four years. This article public opinion for a year has demunded should he repealed.—From "The Coup d'Elat of Louis Napoleon," in the October Scribner's.
